“What misery must it be to be without such a Savior! I scarcely know any words more terrible than these—to be without Christ! And yet I fear that, as terrible as they are, they are applicable to some in this congregation. You have no interest in this heavenly friend, this mighty Savior. Your sins are still upon you—they are written down against you in the book of God's remembrance; and you will soon have to appear in his presence to be judged. But yet there is hope—for Jesus is the friend of publicans and sinners. Come to him, you weary! Welcome to him, you heavy laden. Oh that you would come to him now, and then shall you be able to sing of his unchangeable and undying love!” Charles Ross, 1888
